„Trotz der grenzüberschreitenden Vernetzung von Menschen und Orten prägen nach wie vor ehemalige, z.B. habsburgische, preußische oder osmanische territoriale Gliederungen und Grenzen die Gesellschaften Ostmittel- und Südosteuropas bis heute. Wie lassen sich diese Phänomene, die die Autoren mit dem Konzept der Phantomgrenzen und -räume beschreiben, erklären? Werden sie durch tradierte Strukturen bestimmt, oder durch politische, wissenschaftliche und gesellschaftliche Diskurse imaginiert und (re)produziert?

Ausgehend von empirischen Fallstudien, hinterfragen die Autoren die Raumbezüge von (historischen) Akteuren und analysieren aus deren Perspektive die Wechselwirkungen zwischen Raumwahrnehmung, -erfahrung und -produktion.“ (Beschreibung des Verlages)

„Armina Omerika widmet sich in ihrer Studie der Geschichte des Islams und der muslimischen Gemeinschaft in Bosnien und Herzegowina im 20. Jahrhundert, mit einem Schwerpunkt auf der Zeit zwischen 1918 und 1983. Untersucht wird das Spannungsverhältnis zwischen den wechselnden staatlichen, politischen und institutionellen Vorgaben, den religiösen Netzwerken und den internen Entwicklungen innerhalb der islamischen religiösen Diskurse. Ein besonderer Fokus der Untersuchung liegt dabei auf den Jungmuslimen (Mladi Muslimani), die seit 1941 in unterschiedlichen Formen und im wechselnden Ausmaß das Gesicht des Islams in Bosnien und Herzegowina geprägt haben. Die Jungmuslime entfalteten ihre Aktivitäten in informellen, doch einflussreichen religiösen Netzwerken auf lokaler und internationaler Ebene. [...]“ (Aus der Beschreibung des Verlages)

„Remembering Communism examines the formation and transformation of the memory of communism in the post-communist period. The majority of the articles focus on memory practices in the post-Stalinist era in Bulgaria and Romania, with occasional references to the cases of Poland and the GDR. Based on an interdisciplinary approach, including history, anthropology, cultural studies and sociology, the volume examines the mechanisms and processes that influence, determine and mint the private and public memory of communism in the post-1989 era. The common denominator to all essays is the emphasis on the process of remembering in the present, and the modalities by means of which the present perspective shapes processes of remembering, including practices of commemoration and representation of the past. „Modern Balkan history has traditionally been studied by national historians in terms of separate national histories taking place within bounded state territories. The authors in this volume take a different approach. They view the modern history of the region from a transnational and relational perspective in terms of shared and connected, as well as entangled histories. This regards the treatment of shared historical legacies by rival national historiographies. The volume deals with historiographical disputes that arose in the process of “nationalizing” the past. „Since the early 1990s Southeast European Studies have undergone profound changes being shaped by the wars of Yugoslav succession and the ramifications of post-socialism, coupled with democratic deficiencies, which characterize most of Southeast Europe. The countries which it encompasses rest uneasily on the periphery of the developed variant of Western capitalism, but they have nonetheless to contend with the challenges of adjusting to a market economy. The imprint of these contexts on academic research has led to a discussion of the role of Southeast European Studies. It is the task of this volume to summarize and raise awareness of this discussion.“ (Titelinformation des Verlages)

„Mit dem Ende des Ersten Weltkrieges wurde Siebenbürgen aus der ungarischen Staat herausgelöst und so wie das Banat, das Partium, Bessarabien und die Bukowina ein Teil "Großrumäniens". Der Traum vom "vollständigen" rumänischen Nationalstaat war nun mit einem Schlag in Erfüllung gegangen, der darauf folgende, reale Integrationsprozess schuf jedoch eine Reihe von Konfliktfeldern: ein Großteil der Siebenbürger fühlte sich, unabhängig von der ethnischen Zugehörigkeit, vom zentralistischen System und den Bukarester Politikern vereinnahmt, ausgebeutet und als Bürger zweiter Klasse behandelt. Siebenbürgisch-rumänische Politiker nutzten diese Situation, um ihre programmatischen und persönlichen Interessen durchzusetzen. „Countries rarely disappear off the map. In the 20th century, only a few countries shared this fate with Yugoslavia. The dissolution of Yugoslavia led to the largest war in Europe since 1945, massive human rights violations and over 100,000 victims. Debating the End of Yugoslavia is less an attempt to re-write the dissolution of Yugoslavia, or to provide a different narrative, than to take stock and reflect on the scholarship to date. New sources and data offer fresh avenues of research avoiding the passion of the moment that often characterized research published during the wars and provide contemporary perspectives on the dissolution. The book outlines the state of the debate rather than focusing on controversies alone and maps how different scholarly communities have reflected on the dissolution of the country, what arguments remain open in scholarly discourse and highlights new, innovative paths to study the period. „At a time when some EU member states are attracting attention for the rise to power of illiberal, anti-democratic political movements, this book’s analytical focus on ideas and identities helps explain why institutional progress is not necessarily reflected in the formation of liberal, democratic publics. Starting from the premise that citizens can only uphold the institutions of liberal democracy when they understand and identify with the principles enshrined in them, the author applies normative public sphere theory to the analysis of political discourse and everyday discussion in Serbia and Bulgaria. From this perspective, the Serbian public sphere is observed to be more contested, pluralist and, at the margins, liberal than that of Bulgaria. [...]“ (Aus der Beschreibung des Verlages)

„Exploring the impact of the International Criminal Tribunal (ICTY) on regime change in Serbia, this book examines the relationship between international criminal justice and democratisation. It analyses in detail the repercussions of the ICTY on domestic political dynamics and provides an explanatory account of Serbia’s transition to democracy. Considering that Bulgaria has been a full EU member since 2007 while Serbia remains stuck in the waiting room, it is argued that democratic cultures are not shaped by elite-led drives to meet institutional criteria but rather by the spread of ideas through politics, the media and the discussions of citizens. Moving beyond the narrow focus on institutions that currently prevails in studies of democratization, this book demonstrates the value of a more ethnographic and society-oriented approach. „After forced migration to a country where immigrants form an ethnic majority, why do some individuals support exclusivist and nationalist political parties while others do not? Based on extensive interviews and an original survey of 1200 local Serbs and ethnic Serbian refugees fleeing violent conflict in Bosnia and Croatia, The Politics of Social Ties argues that those immigrants who form close interpersonal networks with others who share their experiences, such as the loss of family, friends, and home, in addition to the memory of ethnic violence from past wars, are more likely to vote for nationalist parties. Any political mobilization occurring within these interpersonal networks is not strategic, rather, individuals engage in political discussion with people who have a greater capacity for mutual empathy over the course of discussing other daily concerns. This book adds the dimension of ethnic identity to the analysis of individual political behavior, without treating ethnic groups as homogeneous social categories. „Why did Albania enjoy some of the most successful anti-corruption programs and institutions along with what appeared to be growing levels of corruption during the period 1998-2005? Looking at corruption through a post-structuralist discourse analysis perspective this book argues that the dominant corruption discourse in Albania served primarily to institute the neoliberal order rather than eliminate corruption. It did so in four interrelated ways. First, blaming every Albanian failure on corruption avoided a critical engagement with the existing neoliberal developmental model. Second, the dominant articulation of corruption as abuse of public office for private gain consigned it to the public sector, transforming neoliberal policies of privatisation and expanding markets into anticorruption measures. „Current standard narratives of Ottoman, Balkan, and Middle East history overemphasise the role of nationalism in the transformation of the region. Challenging these accounts, this book argues that religious affiliation was in fact the most influential shaper of communal identity in the Ottoman era, that religion moulded the relationship between state and society, and that it continues to do so today in lands once occupied by the Ottomans. The book examines the major transformations of the past 250 years to illustrate this argument, traversing the nineteenth century, the early decades of post-Ottoman independence, and the recent past. In this way, the book affords unusual insights not only into the historical patterns of political development but also into the forces shaping contemporary crises, from the dissolution of Yugoslavia to the rise of political Islam. It seeks to reconstruct the ways in which different 'temporalities' and time horizons produced alternative representations of the past and the future, of continuity and discontinuity in a wide spectrum of twentieth-century social and political thinking about modernity and identity: how the ever-growing distance between experience and expectation shaped identity discourse and political action; how the 'politics of time' framed political languages in these regions. „The last volume of the series presents 46 texts under the heading of "anti-modernism". Formed in a dynamic relationship with modernism, from the 1880s to the 1940s, and especially during the interwar period, the anti-modernist ideological constructions of national identification had a considerable impact on the political culture of our region. These texts rejected the linear vision of modernization as well as the liberal democratic institutional frameworks and searched instead for alternative models of politics. The Second World War and the communist takeover in most of these countries seemingly erased these ideological subcultures, who were often engaged in war-time pro-Nazi collaboration. However, their intellectual heritage proved more resilient and influenced the formation of "national communist" narratives in the 1960-70s, while after 1989 many of these references became actualized in the context of the post-communist search for ideological predecessors. „Ante Pavelic was the leader of the fascist party of Croatia (the Ustase), who, on Adolf Hitler's instruction, became the leader of Croatia after the Nazi invasion of 1941. Pavelic was an extreme Croatian nationalist who believed that the Serbian people were an inferior race – he would preside over a genocide that ultimately killed an estimated 390,000 Serbs during World War II. Croatia under Ante Pavelic provides the full history of this period, with a special focus on the United States' role in the post-war settlement. Drawing on previously unpublished documents, Robert McCormick argues that President Harry S. Truman's Cold War priorities meant that Pavelic was never made to answer for his crimes. Doubt, Keith (2014): Through the Window. Kinship and Elopement in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Budapest: CEU Press. 176 S. ISBN 978-963-386-060-1.

„This book is not about war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide, evil, or the killing of a society. It is about a cultural heritage, something vital to a society as a society, something that was not killed in the previous war, something that is resilient. Through the Window brings an original perspective to folklore of Bosnians at a certain period of time and the differences and similarities of the three main ethnic groups in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It examines the transethnic character of cultural heritage, against divisions that dominate their tragic recent past. The monograph focuses in particular on customs shared by different ethnic groups, specifically elopement, and affinal visitation. The elopement is a transformative rite of passage where an unmarried girl becomes a married woman. [...]“ (Aus der Beschreibung des Verlages)

Pisari, Milovan (2014): The Suffering of the Roma in Serbia during the Holocaust. Belgrade: Forum for Applied History. 171 S. ISBN 978-86-916789-2-0.

„Concerning genocide against the Roma in Serbia, there are only fragmentary traces which most frequently appear and are repeated in scientific works devoted to other, kindred topics, such as and above all the Holocaust. Although this issue has been addressed by historiography in Serbia rather seldom and superficially, and despite the fact that certain authors attempted to include suffering of the Jews in the category of significant topics worthy of permanent attention, it can be noticed that since the very outset of their prominence in the public sphere, the Roma have been relegated to a place which has, to a certain extent, always been secondary in relation to the suffering of the Jews. Köpernik, Gerhard (2014): Faschisten im KZ. Rumäniens Eiserne Garde und das Dritte Reich. Berlin: Frank & Timme (Forum: Rumänien, 20). 290 S. ISBN 978-3-7329-0089-3..

„Faschisten im KZ? Das gab es, auch wenn sie „Ehrenhäftlinge“ waren, die lediglich mundtot gemacht werden sollten. Die Eiserne Garde, auch Legion genannt, eine nach dem 1. Weltkrieg in Rumänien gegründete faschistische Bewegung, kam im September 1940 an der Seite General Antonescu an die Macht. Sie putschte erfolglos im Januar 1941 gegen den rumänischen Staatsführer, der das volle Vertrauen Hitlers genoss. Führende Persönlichkeiten der Garde flohen nach Deutschland, wurden interniert und im Januar 1943 in Konzentrationslager gebracht, nachdem ihr Anführer, Horia Sima, versucht hatte, nach Italien zu fliehen. Nach dem Sturz Antonescu im August 1944 wurden die Legionäre zu Bundesgenossen der Nazis. [...]“ (Aus der Beschreibung des Verlages)

Brown, Keith (2013): Loyal Unto Death. Trust and Terror in Revolutionary Macedonia. Bloomington: Indiana University Press (New Anthropologies of Europe). 282 S. ISBN 978-0-253-00840-4.

„The underground Macedonian Revolutionary Organization recruited and mobilized over 20,000 supporters to take up arms against the Ottoman Empire between 1893 and 1903. Challenging conventional wisdom about the role of ethnic and national identity in Balkan history, Keith Brown focuses on social and cultural mechanisms of loyalty to describe the circuits of trust and terror—webs of secret communications and bonds of solidarity—that linked migrant workers, remote villagers, and their leaders in common cause. Loyalties were covertly created and maintained through acts of oath-taking, record-keeping, arms-trading, and in the use and management of deadly violence.“ (Titelinformation des Verlages)
